

Promoting Sparsity via Conditional Priors in Bayesian Inference

Yiqiu Dong

In many large-scale inverse problems, the unknown often admits a sparse representation under an appropriate transform, motivating the search for its sparse representation over a possibly overcomplete dictionary or basis. One way to incorporate sparsity information is through conditional priors. In this talk, I will present one project related with conditional priors under empirical Bayes framework.